Overview

We project that real GDP growth in Burundi will ease slightly from an estimated 2. Domestic demand will remain muted in 2025 amid rising headwinds to private consumption and as higher military expenditure crowds out growth-generating government consumption. However, inflation—driven by the monetization of fiscal deficits, fuel shortages, and external imbalances—continued to weigh on macroeconomic stability and poverty. Burundi is a landlocked state in the Great Lakes Region of East Africa. It shares borders with Rwanda, Tanzania, and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Burundi's main exports include coffee, tea, and sugar, and most of the population works in agriculture, the central pillar of the Burundian.
